Introduction

In today's era of globalization when everything is viewed from a global perspective, the political, diplomatic and business relationships have transcended the borders of all nations and countries in the world. In order to keep pace with the changing world, we need to communicate frequently with people of other countries and languages. This necessitates different mediums of communication through which messages can be transmitted to the intended audience in their desired languages. Center for Multilingual Interpretation and Languages Training (CMILT) is an initiative of Dhaka Ahsania Mission for ensuring effective multilingual communication through general and simultaneous interpretation and translation service on some of the most spoken foreign languages, i.e., Arabic, Bengali, Chinese, English, French, Japanese and Russian.

"BOSCH" simultaneous interpretation system is a movable digital communication system that captures speeches and presentation in the language of the speaker and simultaneously interprets and transmits in the preferred languages of the listeners through eight channel receivers and headphones. While listening to the other purposes. They often face communication problem as they do not speak and understand Bengali. Moreover, all the foreign guests are also not necessarily proficient in English language.
