Need to Increase Tertiary Education Opportunities for Disadvantaged

Dhaka Ahsania Mission (DAM) with support from UNESCO Paris has implemented a study in June 2008 on the issue of increasing tertiary education opportunities for disadvantaged young people in Bangladesh. The aim of the study was to examine the needs and obstacles of disadvantaged young people in pursuing higher/tertiary education and to identify existing opportunities in increasing their access to such education.

Although students in higher education in Bangladesh are increasing day by day, representation of poor young people is very limited due to private cost of education at both primary and secondary levels. According to the BANBEIS report 2006, millions are unable to continue tertiary level education due to lack of resources, absence of higher educational opportunities and institutions in the vicinity, lack of relevant curricula and problem for girl students to access higher education institutions located at a far distance. Even in the National Education Policy 2000, the particular provision of 5 percent of total seats available for student admission to be reserved for poor but talented students and tuition free education for them is too limited and practically does not benefit the poor who are systematically eliminated in the process of entry.

Changes that come along the process of globalization make tertiary education more and more important and the demand for higher education will rise at an increasing rate. It is important that the youths from poor families have increased access to higher education for employment in both domestic and overseas markets.
