Peari got justice

Peari Begum, 25, is the youngest child of her parents at Purbo Keorabunia village of Ailapatakata union under Barguna Sadar upazila in Barguna district. She lost her day labourer father at the age of two only. Her mother earned a living working as a domestic help. Neighbours and her uncle also helped her slightly.

Because of abject poverty, Peari was unable to study much. She was locked in marriage with Mosharraf Hossain, a day labourer at the nearby Lemua village at the age of 18 in 2002. During marriage, her mother gave her son-in-law Tk 10,000 as dowry. After marriage, they passed good days for a considerable period. But problem arose after a while because Peari's husband is an idle person. He spent time in an idle manner. After two years of marriage, Allah blessed them with a baby. But Mosharraf could not bear the expenses of the baby. This is why Peari's relationship with her husband worsened. At one stage, she landed at her father's house with the child. At a village arbitration, it was decided that Peari would stay at her father's house and Mosharraf would supply 10 kilogram of rice regularly for maintenance of the child. At this stage, Mosharraf left for Dhaka in search of a job keeping his 15-days-old child with Peari. From then on, he remained untraced. About 6 to 7 months later, people learnt about his second marriage. As a member of Purbo Keorabunia Bely Gano Kendro (people's centre), Peari lodged a case with the Family Court against Mosharraf because she married for second time without prior consent of first wife. Following issuance of arrest warrant at Badda and Mirpur police stations in Dhaka, Mosharraf was compelled to return to his village home with his second wife. Being informed, Peari and fellow members of the Gano Kendro informed the matter to local Union Parishad (UP) chairman. Peari decided for a break with Mosharraf. The UP chairman convened an arbitration meeting where local elite and Mosharraf's elder brother and brother-in-law were present. According to the final decision, Peari's son was sent back to his father and Mosharraf was asked to hand over a total of Tk 60,000 (Sixty thousand only) to Peari. Of the amount, Tk 50,000 (Fifty thousand taka) is for Peari's maintenance and Tk 10,000 (Ten thousand taka) for withdrawal of the case.

Peari deposited the entire amount with a bank. She wants to spend the money to start a petty business. Now she stays with her mother. Expressing gratitude to the Gano Kendro run by locals in collaboration with the ACCESS-CAFFOD Project of Dhaka Ahsania Mission, Peari said she got justice. She desires to educate her son in near future.
